FOR CONGRESS:

J. ALONZO GREENE

OF MOULTONBORO.

J. ALONZO GREENE,

The People's Popular Candidate.

MAJOR J. ALONZO GRENEE is of general public interest because of his candidacy for the republican nomination to congress. No charges have been brought against the public or private life of Maj. Greene and his friends seem to be very numerous in most unexpected places, and their quiet work as it gradually creeps into the newspapers daily strengthens the valiant major's cause. Biographical statistics are hardly necessary for a man who has lived before the public eye for a quarter of a century. The unpublished phases contain many incidents of humanity and charity which are creditable to the warm heart and generous impulses of the genial proprietor of the famous hostelry, "New Hotel Weirs."

Having decided to retire from active participation in business affairs, the subject of this sketch spent the summers of 1886, '87 and 88 among the mountains and valleys of New Hampshire, which hold for him a peculiar fascination. He traveled extensively through the mountains and among the lakes and seaside resorts of New England, searching for what his family and himself might consider the best place in which to locate, leaving the busy cares of a city life to pass their remaining years in comfort and quiet in the country. In 1889, he purchased a magnificent property on Long Island, the most picturesque Island of Lake Winnipesaukee, in the town of Moultonboro, and there, with increasing devotion to the state of his adoption, has ever since held his legal residence.

Doctor Greene was born in Whitingham, Vt., Nov. 5, 1845, just across the river from his adopted state, and he has remarked that the next best thing to being born in the state was to be born on the side hill, where he could look across the river at the New Hampshire mountains.

A man of the Doctor's breadth of intellect, superior ability and vast wealth of resource and experience could not be long ignored in any community, especially as he asked nothing beyond the good will of his fellow citizens. The confiding trust of those associated with him has been his mascot to the 32nd degree of Free Masonry and his open sesame to the foremost rank of membership in the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Grand Amoskeag Veterans, Elks and Grand Army of the Republic.

When a boy of 18, in 1863, he enlisted at Denver, Col., in the First Colorado, served during the war, and was discharged at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, in the fall of 1865. The Doctor is one of the very few men who went into the army as a private soldier and was discharged, holding the same rank, his promotion coming only in time of peace, long years after the close of the war, when he was commissioned by Governors Bnsiel and Rollins.

Major Greene is ex-president of the National Veteran Association of New Hampshire and is now its treasurer; also ex-president of the N. H. Veteran Association and past-commander of Post 86. His membership in the G. A. R. and in all the various bodies above mentioned was transferred to New Hampshire when he first moved here, showing conclusively that he came with the intention of being a permanent resident.

The National Veteran Association was enabled to cancel its debt on its magnificent building at The Weirs largely through the generosity of Comrade Greene, and it is well known that the elegant banner carried in all the parades of the State G.A.R. and the beautiful gold-mounted sword worn by the commander were presented by the same comrade. Major Greene also established and maintained for years, at his own personal expense, the emergency hospital during the reunions at The Weirs, and the various money prizes awarded to the oldest man, youngest man, homeliest man, ugliest man, etc., etc., came from the same source.

One of Major Greene's army exploits was after the fighting was over and he was waiting to be honorably discharged. It was not a fight as is generally understood in war language, but a fight against hunger and possible starvation. "Jean Paul" tells this story in one of his interesting articles in the Granite Monthly.

PRIVATE J. A. GREENE—1865.

When discharged from the Army.

The regiment in which the Major was a private soldier was on its way from New Mexico to Fort Leavenworth, to be mustered out of the service. Antelope and other game were plentiful, and three of the boys, including Private Greene, ran the guard one night for a moonlight hunt, got separated from his two companions and lost. After roaming around for three days, sustaining himself on raw antelope meat, he met a corporal's guard, who arrested him for desertion and sent him alone to camp, which he reached after three days' travel, having been absent from his regiment six days in all.

The exploit, which is a pet story of the Major's, was satisfactorily explained to the captain (Anderson) and the major who was in command (Wyancope), and Greene was excused and returned to his company for duty. He was afterwards honorably discharged with his regiment.

Deer were numerous along the river bank and the soldier boys were always glad to get venison for breakfast. It was a common practice in those days, when the rebellion was practically over, for two or three of them to take a hunt by moonlight for sport, and this incident was considered an everyday occurrence in army life and never looked upon seriously until after the Major became a political candidate when it was given the worst construction possible to his detriment.

The names of thousands of soldiers appear on the records as deserters, from the fact that all who are not present at roll call while a regiment is on a march, and who are not accounted for, must, under military rules, be reported as deserters until they have been excused or pardoned. In Major Greene's case it was readily understood by the officers of the regiment, as they knew the situation thoroughly, and it seems the more strange, therefore, that political capital should be made of a boyish prank which occurred so frequently in the regiment. It must be understood, also, that when this took place the First Colorado was not within 500 miles of the Confederate states, that the rebel army had surrendered, and nearly all the forces at the front had been discharged.

The idea that a boy soldier as shown in the above picture, which is from a photograph taken in 1865, about to be mustered out, filled with thoughts of home and friends foremost in his mind, should desert in a country hundreds of miles from any town, infested only with wolves and bands of Indians, is absurdly preposterous.

It is certainly extremely uncomplimentary to the members of the G. A. R. to think that for a moment they would retain in their ranks such a man especially since they have made him commander of a post, president of the two great veterans' associations, and still honor him as treasurer of one of them, if he had been a deserter.

If the officers of young Greene's regiment could excuse his indiscretion, and if the officials of the G. A. R. and the two associations of veterans, who have examined his discharge papers, have seen fit to honor him with the highest offices in their gift, it seems that the voters of the First New Hampshire Congressional District could be equally lenient.

Dr. Greene's interests have become identified with the state; his heart and home are certainly here. For instance, he built the steamers Eagle and Roxmont and established a steamboat line on eastern shores of Lake Winnipsaukee, thus bringing into direct intercourse with the business and commercial world the remote islands and isolated villages of the lake region, which heretofore had been deprived of proper mail and transportation facilities.

Comrad J. A. Greene.

The New Hotel Weirs, which was purchased and improved by the doctor, is one of the finest hotels in the state, and the increase of summer travel across the lake has been largly the outgrowth of his persevering and persistent efforts in building up this locality.

He is also a director in two New Hampshire national banks, director and shareholder in two New Hampshire building associations, and a stockholder in one of the largest and most influential daily newspapers in the state.

In the summer of 1889 Dr. Greene bought the two farms now comprising his homestead on Long Island and moved thither immediately with his wife and son, household effects, horses, dog and all, and established there his legal residence.

It has been said by the doctor's political opponents that the dinner, given a short time ago to the Amoskeag Veterans and nearly a thousand of the prominent men in New Hampshire, was of a selfish nature and for political advancement. This statement is rendered entirely negative and inoperative from the fact that the Major entertained the Amoskeag Veterans and hundreds of their friends in 1892 at his home on Long Island. As still further evidence that the doctor's hospitality is not entirely of a self-interested nature, it is proper to state that in the same year mentioned, among the people who favored the doctor, and who came in large bodies, by special train and steamboats, were the Free Masons and ladies of Belknap and Carroll counties, the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the State Grange and the State Board of Agriculture, with the ladies and friends. It is a well authenticated fact that, in a single week, 4000 people were entertained at dinner by the hospitable doctor. The writer recently interviewed Major Greene regarding this point. Said the Ma-

COCHRAN DISCHARGED.

The Evidence Not Sufficient to Connect Him With the Stabbing Affair.

The mysterious stabbing case reported in our last issue remains as deep a mystery as ever in the eyes of the law. The evidence connecting Cochran with the affair was insufficient to hold him, and he was discharged. The case occupied the entire forenoon last Saturday, at Laconia. County Solicitor Beckford conducted the case for the state, and Lawyer Shannon defended Cochran.

Alec Raymond was the first witness. He is the one that the knife was meant for, according to the prevailing belief. Raymond testified that Cochran and the Batchelder boys, one of whom drove the suspected team, passed twice in front of his house. Raymond and Drolet were made to stand side by side. Their resemblance was such that it could be easily seen that they might be mistaken for one another after dark, even by a close acquaintance of both.

Drolet, the young man who was stabbed, told how a team containing three persons stopped in front of him, and how a man got out and stabbed him twice, he catching the blow upon the left hand each time. He thought the team was an open buggy and that his assailant was a little taller than himself. He said that no word was spoken by his assailant until he had returned to the team, when he said: "If you strange fellows think you're going to cut ice you'll get left. Hurrah for Alec!" It was this, with other matters, that led many to believe that Drolet was mistaken for Alec Raymond. Drolet stated that he chased the team a long distance, but without being able to catch up with it.

The next witness was Harry Batchelder, who drove the team containing the suspected youth. Batchelder was evidently somewhat nervous, but his story was a good one for Cochran. It was brought out that the team was a covered one, and Cochran is shorter than Drolet, so that Drolet's description did not agree with the arrested boy and the team.

Cochran was put on the stand by Lawyer Shannon. He deposed that he never knew Raymond, that he knew nothing of the affair until he heard that he was suspected the next Monday afternoon. In regard to a Meredith woman and her daughter, Cochran declared that he only knew them slightly and had not spoken to them for a year. It was thought at first that the affair came about through the young man's jealousy of Raymond and the young lady. At the close of the case, County Solicitor Beckford stated that he would not ask the court to hold the young man upon that evidence, and he was at once discharged.

For the present the case has been dropped, but new developments later on may give the state a chance to probe deeper in the affair. The occurrence shows that the community contains one or more scoundrels, and it is to be hoped that they will be identified and punished.

SPEND YOUR MONEY IN MEREDITH.

The Nashua Press, in the course of a very sensible article (by the way, the Press is rarely anything else but sensible), says:

The mills and factories of Nashua were never paying out so much money to wage-earners as today. Nashuans, therefore, have money to spend. It follows that the old recommendation comes in: Spend it at home. Don't purchase a dollar's worth of anything needed for personal comfort or the family in Boston or any other place until you have endeavored to find it in some one of the stores that advertise in the Press. Be loyal to your own. It is the only way to make Nashua prosperous in every department of trade.

The News has for months past been urging that the same thing be done in Meredith. Nearly 50 per cent. of the clothing, dry goods, hats, boots and shoes, millinery, etc., used by residents of Meredith, is purchased in Laconia. It should not be so. The Laconia merchants do not help to pay the taxes in Meredith. They do not assist in lighting the streets, furnishing water, building sidewalks, or contribute in any manner, shape or form toward making our town a pleasant place to reside in. As the Press speaks of Nashua so says the News of Meredith. Do not spend a cent out of town until you are sure that the article you need is not in Meredith or cannot be procured for you. A portion of the money thus expended will find its way back to your pockets, but hardly five cents out of every ten thousand spent in Laconia ever comes back to Meredith.

THE "DEMOCRAT" AND THE GOVERNOR.

It is understood that the principal reason for the non-attendance of New Hampshire's governor and staff at the Dewey celebration was the fact that they would have been obliged to pay their own expenses, and naturally a junket of this kind is very distasteful to people who are accustomed to travel on free railroad passes. A clam-bake or basket picnic anywhere in New Hampshire which can be reached on a free pass will bring out the governor and his noble staff of "tin soldiers" every time, but when the whole nation does honor to Admiral Dewey, New Hampshire takes a back seat on account of travelling expenses and hotel bills. God save the state.

Last winter ex-Governor Busiel unblushingly stated, in an exulting manner, that he bribed everybody with railway passes when he was in the railway business, prior to the time that he began to pose as a sanctified reformer. Such being the case, had he not been kicked out of the company he would have furnished the governor and his entire staff with passes and sandwiches last week, and the readers of the Democrat would have been spared the dismal tale of woe above quoted.

The News joins with the Democrat in saying "God save the state," but it must be saved from the scandal mongers who charge the governor and other high officials with selling their honor for passes. The Democrat charges the NEWS with attacking citizens of Laconia, and yet the columns of our contemporary are filled every week with articles like the one from which the above-quoted paragraph was taken, abounding in vile insinuations, despicable innuendoes and shameful personal thrusts.

The following from the Carroll County Pioneer fits our case exactly in connection with the large number of bills we are sending out weekly: "With this issue of the Pioneer we send out bills to a large number of subscribers who are in arrears, and from the bottom of our great, big soul we wish that each one would promply respond. Then, indeed, life would put on its most roseate hue for us, and joy take up its abode in our wigwam. Give the devil his due, if devil we be, and you will have the consciousness of having done your duty by a suffering brother. Don't let procrastination govern your actions, but send in the cash at once. Every dollar we receive within the next few weeks will remove a wrinkle from our heavily corrugated brow.

The Warren News is rolling in clover and honey. While a majority of the country newspaper publishers are dodging their landlords, our happy and prosperous confrere on the breezy summit of Mt. Warren is building a commodious printing office, two stories high. The interior will be finished in Carolina pine and no doubt the editor's chair will be lined with red plush, while the office cat will lap her cream from a silver bowl. We extend the glad hand to the mountain-top journalist and trust he will always hang out the latch string to his less fortunate confreres.

A FAMILY REUNION.

Last week Tuesday and Wednesday the Maplehurst, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Matthew C. Clark, in West Centre Harbor, was the scene of an "Old Home" celebration, which although it was a little later in the season than such affairs have been held this year, partook of the essential features of such an event. The Maplehurst was erected in 1819 by William Clark, the first representative of the family in this vicinity, on the land which he hewed from the primeval forest. He came to Centre Harbor near the close of the last century, living for several years on the farm formerly owned by the late John A. Perkins, after which he moved to the present Clark homestead. He was a typical frontiersman and his sterling worth was soon recognized by the few settlers who had preceded him. In the Oak Hill church which the early settlers built he was a deacon, and its records testify to his great activity in religious work.

The town made him a member of the Board of Selectmen soon after its incorporation about the beginning of the century and he served almost continuously until 1830. His death caused the division of his landed property, the part now occupied by Mrs. E. R. Piper going to the eldest son, John, while the homestead division fell to James H., the youngest son. Here James H. lived all his days, serving his town twice in the Legislature as a representative and several times in other capacities. To him was born five children, who are all living and enjoying good health, their ages ranging from 56 to 64. They are as follows: Matthew C., who occupies the home farm; Mary J., who married John S. Piper, now a widow living in Ashland; Sarah A., wife of Nathaniel B. Cornell, who died several years ago at Everett, Mass., where she now resides; Delia D., now Mrs. Charles Webster, of Sandwich; and William M., now a barber at Morrisville, Vt. These were all present Tuesday and Wednesday, and although the home-coming to their ancestral abode was the result of but a few days' notice, the following were also present:

James W. Clark and family, West Centre Harbor.

A. Chester Clark, New Hampton.

Charles A. Clark, Meredith.

Mrs. Myrtie E. Pierce, Miss Bessie M. Piper, Ashland.

Ella M. Adams, Lakeport.

James H. Clark, Morrisville, Vt.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram S. McCrillis, West Centre Harbor.

A very enjoyable occasion was the decision of all present to meet again in larger numbers in one year.

BORN IN MEREDITH.

Mrs. Submit Robert (Scott) widow of Elliott Greene Tewksbury, died at her home on North Elm street in Manchester last Saturday. She had been ill nearly a year but her condition was not considered critical until shortly before her death. The cause of her death was a clot of blood on the brain. She was born in Meredith and was a daughter of Robert Scott. Three children survive her. They are Mrs. William C. Clark of Manchester, George E. Tewsbury of Newark, N.J. and Lewis G. Tewksbury of New York city. Besides these children there are one brother, James B. Scott of Manchester, and two sisters, Mrs. A. S. Johnson and Mrs. Jacob P. Tewksbury of Topeka, Kansas.

Dr. Greene is to start for a Western trip in the near future and A. W. Easter, who has been one of the bellboys at The Weirs hotel this summer, is to go with him as one of his advertising men. The blue herons, owls, Japanese parrots, etc., that attracted so much attention at The Weirs hotel this summer have been taken to a taxidermist, who will mount them for the doctor. All the plants and palms that were at the hotel this summer have been placed in a hot house for safe keeping this winter. The hotel will probably be unoccupied this winter, except by a keeper.

Correspondents will confer a great favor if they will send in their communications so as to reach us by Monday night, and in case anything of importance occurs, a second letter can be sent us later in the week. tf

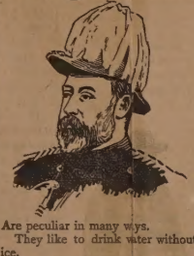
Our English Cousins



Are peculiar in many ways.

They like to drink water without ice.

They would rather walk upstairs than take an elevator.

They use ordinary portable bath tubs in place of stationary porcelain or metal ones such as we have.

What seems to us the funniest thing of all is that the absolutely prefer chicory in their coffee.

It is easy enough for any one to get adulterated coffee in this country. But the good housewife watches carefully that she is not thus imposed upon.

Those who have learned by experience and wish to be absolutely sure that they are getting pure coffee and the best coffee, without a grain of adulteration, ask for and insist upon having Chase & Sanborn's Coffees.

There is none better in the market. Every bean has been carefully selected from plantations, famous for their coffee crops.

The fact that these coffees bear the seal of Chase & Sanborn is in itself a sufficient guarantee that they are full weight and in every way perfect.

Seal Brand Coffee comes in one and two-pound tin cans, and their other high grades in richly colored parchment-lined imported bags.

MOBILIZING AN ARMY

How the Reserves Are Quickly Placed on a War Footing.

All the Systems Now in Vogue Patterned After the German Plan—The Modus Operandi Described by Col. Greene.

[Special Correspondence.]

THE great annual army maneuvers are now on. The bulk of the German, Russian, Austrian, Italian and French armies is under arms and fighting mimic battles all over central Europe. American army officers, accredited to the various governments as military attaches, are carefully studying the methods employed by European commanders, the systems of transportation and the routine of the commissariat departments. Wonderful, truly, was the machinery which enabled the United States to put an army of 200,000 men into the field last year, but the commanding officers, able fighters as they were, knew very little about the establishment of sanitary camps and the proper distribution of wholesome rations, to which ignorance were due untold hardships and a great loss of life, to say nothing of the scandals in the war department which at one time threatened to undermine all discipline in our military establishment.

The military representatives of our government are young officers distinguished for their knowledge of tactics and their catholic learning, and their presence at the European army maneuvers will prove of great advantage to our own service. In former years the German commanders were decidedly reluctant to admit foreign officers into their inner councils, but this season Emperor William has given special direction for their entertainment and has been signally kind to the American officers, who are to have unlimited freedom in pursuing their investigations and filing their official reports.

Besides having annual maneuvers most of the European armies give an occasional trial to their system of mobilization by which great armies can be brought together and put on a war footing in a short time. The system now in general use all over Europe was evolved by the general headquarters staff of the German army; and, although it would prove of no use in this country, where military service in times of peace is not compulsory, yet it is of sufficient interest to be described in detail. Col. Francis Vinton Greene, of the British army, a recognized authority on subjects relating to the art of war, concedes to rapid and thorough mobilization the first place in the successful conduct of modern warfare, and from a recent pamphlet written by this distinguished author and soldier we learn that the system after which the great powers have fashioned their armies originated with the terms imposed by Napoleon on Prussia after the battle of Jena. By these terms Prussia was permitted to keep only 42,000 men in the army. This condition was lived up to faithfully, but Napoleon's plan said nothing as to the length of service. Gen. Scharnhorst took advantage of the omission and invented a system by which a certain number of men could go home on furloughs, after four weeks' service, and other would be conscripted to take their places, and these would be allowed to go on furloughs, and by this system of enlisting men and keeping them in the service, whether on actual duty or on furlough, a large army soon grew up, so that in 1813, when Prussia struck back at Napoleon, it had 250,000 trained men and brought 170,000 into the field.

The fundamental principle of the system is the universal liability to military service during a certain period, beginning with 20 years of age. Men are selected by lot every year to fill up the ranks, and all must serve 12 years. The time is divided so that a man has two years' service in the ranks, five years in the reserve and five years in the landwehr, or second reserve. That is in Germany, but it is the same in the other military countries except as to detail.

Depots are established from which depleted bodies may receive reinforcements and be kept up to their normal strength. The real advantages of the system were shown by Germany in the war of 1866 and again in 1870, and its adoption by France after the reorganization of the army showed that it had impressed favorably the nation which it had ruined. The men in the reserve class are liable to be called at any moment; they are enrolled and a part of certain regiments, the depots or assembling points for which are known to every man. Mobilization consists in calling in this reserve force, furnishing the men the necessary equipments and dispatching them with the officers who are kept in reserve for this purpose to the regiments where they belong. Most of the officers are with the colors or in active service, but the great mass of privates is in the reserve, ready at a few hours' notice to increase the regiments to their war footing proportions.

When the reserve goes to the front a certain number of officers is left behind to serve as recruiting and organization force in case the landwehr should be needed, and when that body is called upon to go to the front it is brought together as readily as the younger and more numerous first reserve.

The great purpose accomplished by this system of expansive armies is to enable a nation to put into the field in the short space of two weeks a vast array of trained soldiers, while in time of peace it maintains only a comparatively small portion of them under pay and unproductive. It was only two weeks after the declaration of war in 1870 when nearly 500,000 German soldiers advanced in a body across the French border, and that is the measure of time that the continental powers can count upon to be ready for defense.

To demonstrate the rapidity with which a great army may be mobilized, Col. Greene cites that at the outbreak of the war between Prussia and Austria, in 1866, the Prussian army in active service numbered 210,000 men. Mobilization was ordered on May 3, and six weeks later the active army had been increased to 826,000 men, in addition to depot and garrison troops whose numbers, it is stated, carried the total to 600,000 men under arms. Of these not less than 230,000 were brought to the field of Sadowa on July 3, and these inflicted such an overwhelming defeat on the Austrians as to cause them to sue for peace at once. The war lasted less than three months, only six weeks of which were devoted to active operations.

In 1870 the armies of the states composing the present German empire numbered in all 382,568 men present with the colors. The order for mobilization was given July 15, and two weeks later there were concentrated on the Rhine three armies, numbering 440,000 men. On August 15 the effective total of men under arms was 1,183,389, of whom 650,000 were at the front, 230,000 in the depots and 300,000 on home service. The French armies were outnumbered, defeated and captured in bulk.

In 1877 the Russian field army numbered 607,500 men and was capable of expansion to 1,880,000. Only two-thirds of the field army was mobilized, and this furnished during the winter of 1877-78 a force of about 600,000 men, of whom 625,000 were at the front and the rest on the communication or garrison service. The Turkish armies were outnumbered and defeated and three-fourths of them were captured.

Mobilization is effected through what is known as the general staff—a body composed of the best officers in the land. The general staff not only keeps records of the army and its various grand divisions as to the active and furlough or reserve men, but is informed on all matters pertaining to the armies of other nations, so far as they are obtainable. Anticipating wars, there are plans of campaigns with all nations, even with those from whom there never was any sign of trouble. These plans are not of a superficial nature, but thorough in every detail. In the German general staff in particular they are kept up to date in every respect. All railroads and post roads are kept under rigid observation, and all improvements are noted. It is known how many employes every railroad has, and every item pertaining to its rolling stock, road bed, bridges and depots is as familiar to the general staff as to the railroad officials. Every detail as to transportation of troops, horses, artillery and wagons to any point is filed away for use at a moment's notice; the officers who are to command at various points have been agreed upon, and in case of death another is immediately substituted.

At regular intervals the entire mobilization machinery is set in motion so as to avoid accidents in case of necessity and to prevent the system from being rendered ineffective by inexperience or red tape. Fortunately, our system of government renders the establishment of a mobilization bureau unnecessary. Yet it is comfortable to know that our army leaders are thoroughly familiar with its secrets. C. No one who knows Rt. Hon. Sir Julian Pauncefote and the useful work he has done for his country during the course of his diplomatic career will grudge him the peerage which has just been conferred upon him by his sovereign. Sir Julian, whose portrait we give, was born in 1828, and called to the bar in 1852. He has been British ambassador since 1893 to the United States, in which capacity alone he has rendered his country excellent service by his tact and judgment, and he has been the principal representative of Great Britain at the recent international conference at The Hague. The new peer has friends in many parts of her majesty's dominions. From 1865 to 1869 he was attorney general of Hong-Kong, and was ex-officio member of the executive and legislative councils and acting chief justice of the supreme court from 1869 to 1872, and was knighted in 1874 for his public services in the colony. He was made chief justice of the Leeward islands in 1873, assistant under secretary of state for the colonies in 1874, assistant under secretary of state for foreign affairs in 1876, and permanent under secretary in 1882. In 1889 Sir Julian was appointed envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the United States, and since 1893 he has been ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary. He was appointed K. C. M. G. in 1880, G. C. M. G. in 1885, K. C. B. in 1888, and G. C. B. in 1892. Sir Julian's diplomatic skill and conciliatory temperament have served England well in more than one period of difficulty.

jor, "Why, the idea is utterly absurd; the cost of the entertainments that I have given during the past few years to the friends who have honored me by accepting my invitations and hospitality far exceeds the amount of money which is generally expended by the successful aspirant to high political office. The expense and entertainment at this particular dinner of which you speak, when the governer and the highest officials of the state favored me with their presence, depleted my bank account to a much greater extent than my canvass for congressional honors will do and I believe that this money expended directly to push a political canvass would have been far more beneficial, from a political standpoint; but I assure you that it these dinners have been of assistance to me in helping me to gratify my ambition, I am much pleased.

If you toot your whistle and then lay down your horn, there's not a soul will ever know that such a man was born. The man who owns his acres is the man who ploughs all day, and he who keeps a humping is the man that makes it pay. The man who advertises with a short and sudden jerk, is the man who blames the printer because it didn't work. The man who gets the business uses brainy printer's ink, not a cutter splutter, but an ad. that makes you think; he who plans his well bought stock, has the future of his business just as solid as a rock.

The summer is past and the time for big fish stories is ended, but here comes a snake story from Kansas. The author of this playful prevarication avers, in the The St. Louis Globe Democrat, that thirty-three years ago while hoeing corn in Tennessee on a hot afternoon he sighted a hoop snake rolling down upon him at lightning speed between the rows. That he had just time to step one side, but the snake struck his hoe handle, driving his tail clear through it, which held the reptile a prisoner until he dispatched it with a stone. Then this cheerful yarnist, who signs himself Benjaman Franklin, rounds up as follows: "Now the curious part came in; the hoe handle began to swell and in fifteen minutes it was as large as my arm."

DEWEY'S WELCOME.

The Land Parade a Great Success.

New York, Oct. 2.—The land parade Saturday capped the climax. The earth trembled beneath the tread of 50,000 men, and the air was torn with the shouts of millions. The naval parade of Friday was a magnificent and superb spectacle, but the wonder of modern times was the great land parade. Thousands of men of the land and sea forces, militia of fifteen states and the veterans of the Spanish-American wars swelled the procession and gave it the dignity in size that it boasted in sentiment. Walls of people miles long stretched down the line of march on each side, a dense impregnable mass.

Washington, Oct. 2:—The homecoming of Admiral George Dewey, for henceforth the National Capital is to be his home—was made the occasion for the greatest tribute ever paid by Washington to any individual.

It was said by the railroad officials and trainmen that the ovation during the run from New York to Washington was the most remarkable that has ever taken place along the line. Every town turned out its full population, as did every house and cross-roads settlement, to see the special pass.

"When our boys were almost dead from whooping cough, our doctor gave One Minute Cough Cure. They recovered rapidly," writes P.B. Belles Argyle, Pa. It cures coughs, colds, grippe and all throat and lung troubles.
